Facebook	Tiki-Toki
LinkedIn

Perks to using social media in your genealogy

- You are already here connecting with friends and family
- Crowdsourcing is a brilliant way to answer those tough questions
- Blogs, boards, posts & pins are a great way to quickly share information
- You never know where the next big idea will originate

Pinterest

Pinterest is a website to help people visually organize topics of interest such as recipes, trip ideas, wedding planning and of course genealogy tips!

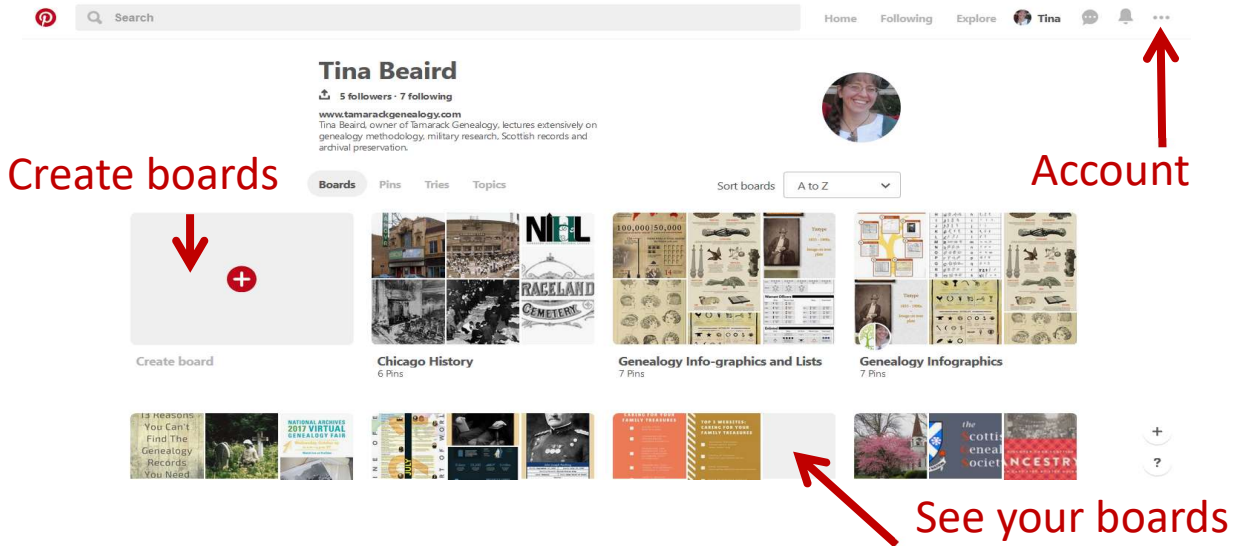

You must sign up for a free account in order to browse the millions of pins on their site and create your own 'boards.'

Once you create your account, you can begin browsing other member's boards for ideas and inspiration.

Click on your name in the upper right-hand corner to get started.

Here you'll begin the process of creating boards to store all of your new genealogy tips and tricks.

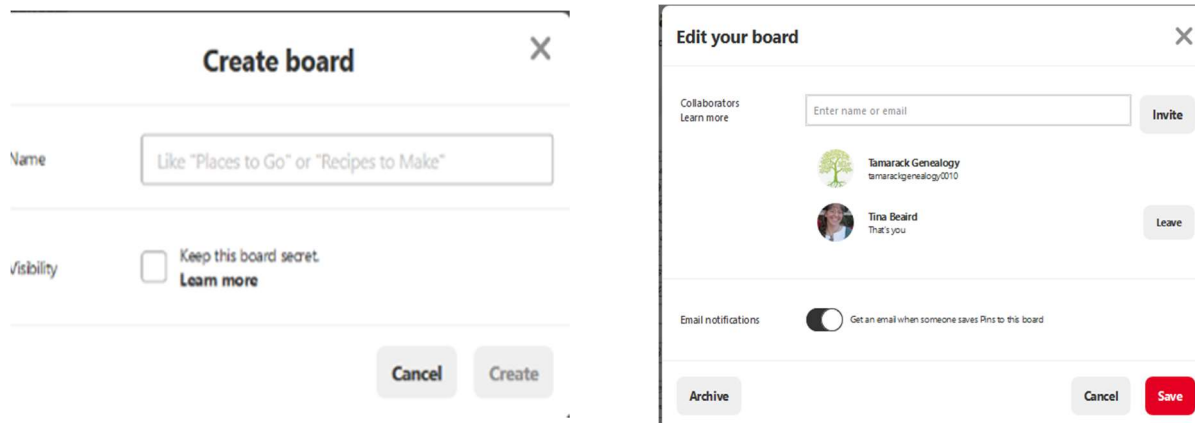

Follow the steps on the screen to create your first board.

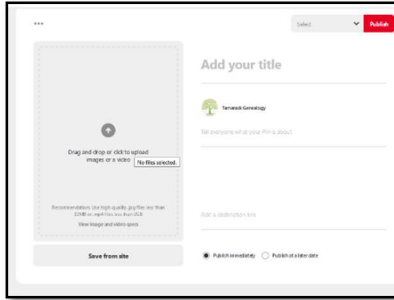

What do you want to name your board?

Do you want to add a description to keep topics and themes together?

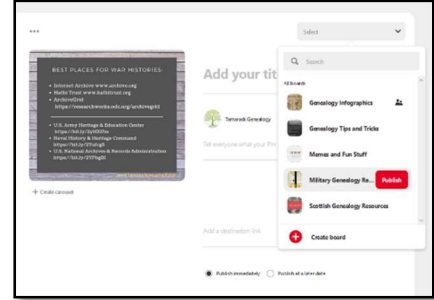

Who do you want to be able to see your boards?

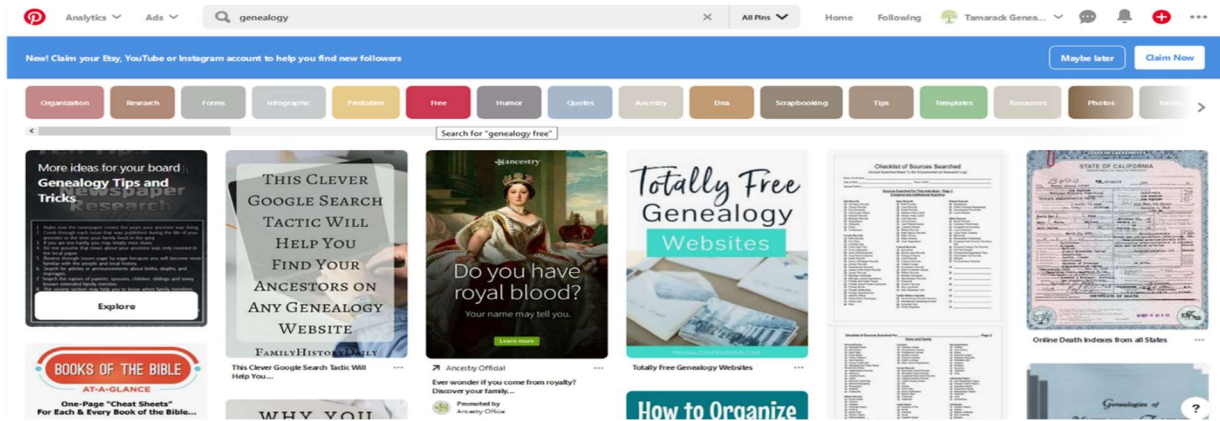

Once you've created your board you can begin pinning other people's pins. Each time you pin an idea the site will ask you which board you would like to use. You can make boards private (for your eyes only) by choosing private in your settings. Want to co-manage a board? Add the email or user name to add friends and family.

You can upload your own pins in three easy steps!
Upload an image or copy and paste a website
Then choose your board!

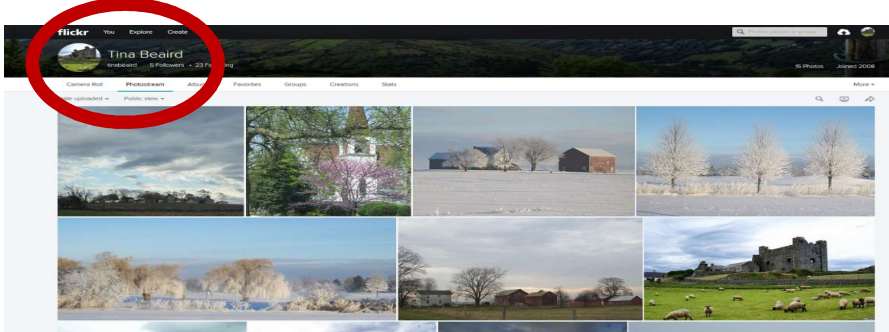

Take advantage of the search features to browse the site by topics i.e. cemeteries, genealogy, history, headstones etc... if you can think of it, someone has most likely pinned it!

Flickr

Flickr is an extremely useful tool for finding images that can aid you in your genealogy searching. Flickr is based on a Yahoo platform, so if you already have a Yahoo account, you do not need to create a new login and password.

You can upload and tag your own photos or browse millions of photos from individuals, groups, museums and professionals from around the world.

Tags can be inconsistent so use as many terms that you can imagine per topic to find the most photos possible i.e. cemetery, burial ground, graveyard, kirkyard or headstone, marker, gravestone, monument etc...

Many genealogical groups, societies and museums are on Flickr providing copyright free access to their collections. Be sure to read the copyright statement at the bottom of each photo for rights and permissions. Follow those people and groups that interest you.

Facebook

We're already on Facebook to stay connected with friends and family. Check to see if there is a closed family or surname group that you can join to share family history and photos. Small genealogical societies & museums may not have webpages, but they are probably on Facebook!

If you are planning a genealogical road trip to your ancestral homeland or just driving across the state to visit your grandparent's graves, Facebook can be your best resource! Here is your opportunity to ask a question before you go!

Ask the experts! Find answers to your genealogical brick walls, or just scroll through to see what is new in the genealogical world, by liking some of these well-known pages.

LinkedIn

LinkedIn is a great resource for networking opportunities with professionals and hobbyists alike. It is the best place to connect with experts in the field and ask questions and get reliable advice.

It is an ideal way to learn about upcoming events, conferences, classes, and learning opportunities in a speedy and efficient manner.

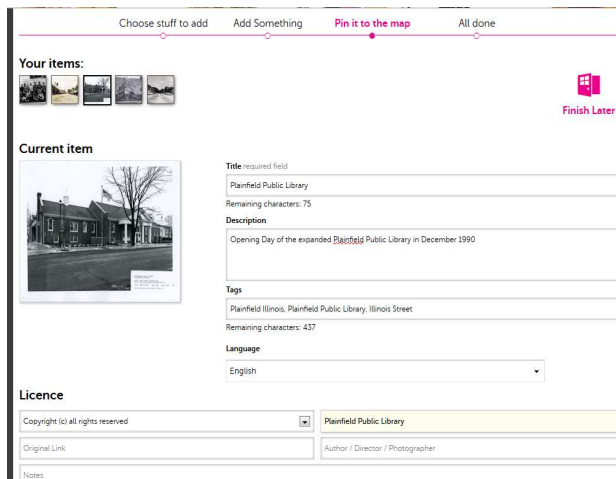

Joining groups is a great way to expand your knowledge base without having to 'link' with strangers.

History Pin and What Was There are fantastic sites for uploading your locational photos like pictures of great-grandma's house or the church where your parents were married. It isn't about the people, but the places!

History Pin allows you to pin your photos to a world map (using the Google map platform) and write detailed descriptions of the photos and their significance.

You can brose collections from individuals, societies, museums and libraries from around the globe.

You can even view guided tours of famous places.

You are in total control of your images. These images cannot be downloaded by others.

Provide the details of the photo such as date, photographer, and upload an image 5 mega- bytes or less.

What Was There

What Was There is the best website for societies and museums to marry history with the modern world.

You can take historic images and imbed them over Google street view maps and line up the image to match the modern street view! This allows viewers to connect with the history of a community on a deeper level. Each Image has a slider to bring the historic image forward or backward over the modern image. You can view each image, and zoom in on specific details, but you cannot download the images.

What Was There is a great opportunity for family historians to share history with extended family, members of the community and even map lovers out there!

Tiki-Toki

Tiki-Toki builds timelines for your genealogy. It is a great way to keep projects organized! It allows you to put unlimited topics or families on the same timeline and separate them through color coding.
